

President of the Australian Human Rights Commission
Professor Gillian Triggs
National Inquiry into Children in Immigration Detention 2014
GPO Box 5218
Sydney NSW 2001
Australia
30.5.14

Dear Professor Triggs

Re: National Inquiry into Children in Immigration Detention 2014

We thank you for an opportunity to make a submission to the Commission on this important topic.

The Australian Churches Refugee Taskforce is an initiative of the National Council of Churches in Australia. The Taskforce formally commenced work in April 2013 and currently has over 407 members. The core steering committee is comprised of 21 senior members of churches and church agencies, representing nine Christian churches and three ecumenical bodies from across Australia.

All the Lonely Children report

A key concern and focus of the Taskforce from the outset has been the welfare of refugee and asylum seeking children. To this end, in October 2013 we released our draft report: - All The Lonely Children: Questions for the Incoming Government Regarding Guardianship for Unaccompanied Minors.

We enclose a copy of this paper for the Commission at Attachment A. The full response to the questions raised with the Minister for Immigration and Border Protection is enclosed at Attachment B. We also note that we will be finalizing our paper and recommendations in coming weeks, and will also forward a copy of this forthwith.

Many of our member churches and their welfare agencies will be making submissions to your inquiry about some of the broader issues raised in your terms of reference and discussion paper. We support these contributions. However, in addition we would like to particularly raise one area of concern that is one in which the voice of asylum seeking children has been perhaps most significantly silenced.

1. Children left alone

Unaccompanied children who arrive in Australia seeking asylum are purportedly in the care of the Australian Government, in particular the Minister for Immigration stands in loco parentis, assuming the place of the natural parent.

As the Taskforce articulated in All the Lonely Children, those people who are given the role of guardians have as their first responsibility the need to make available the supportive caring relationships that are necessary for children to flourish. In assuming the role of guardianship, parents, leaders, governments take upon themselves a great responsibility. Such a role can be a means of blessing for the child and society, or an indication of indifference and lack of care at the heart of civil relationships.

Yet when an asylum seeking child, bereft of family or carer, arrives in Australia seeking our protection, the very Minister who ought to become that guardian for them, also becomes their jailer and judge under other Ministerial responsibilities.

The process of navigating Australia's increasingly complex refugee determination process is largely left to the child seeking asylum, as the Minister is not compelled, as their guardian, to facilitate their applications for asylum, nor to 'ensure that the children are made aware of their legal entitlements.'¹ Extremely limited practical support is available to children to understand and give effect to their full range of legal rights.

Australia's dealings with these unaccompanied children routinely fail to meet basic international standards such as the UNHCR Guidelines on Policies and Procedures in Dealing with Unaccompanied Children Seeking Asylum, which specifically recommend²:

'..an asylum-seeking child should be represented by an adult who is familiar with the child's background and who would protect his/her interests. Interviews should be conducted by specially qualified and trained officials.

2. Enhanced screening

One of the clearest demonstrations of such failings is the application of "enhanced screening" to unaccompanied children.

Enhanced screening has been described as "unfair and unreliable" by Richard Towle, the former UNHCR regional representative,³ and Australian Lawyers for Human Rights (ALHR), amongst others, have expressed concern that it does not afford procedural justice, risks refoulement, and is not in accordance with Australia's international obligations.⁴ A former Immigration official intimately involved in the process also expressed similar fears of these dangers.⁵ We note that the Australian Human Rights Commission has also previously expressed similar views.⁶

The Taskforce concern is not merely with the conduct of this screening process, it is the very fact that they take place at all in these circumstances.

Shortly after arriving in Australia, the unaccompanied child who has sought our protection may be interviewed, the end result of which might be they are returned to the country they have fled, without having their claim for asylum fairly and rigorously assessed.

¹ Crock & Kenny (2012), p.452. See discussion 450-453 of Jaffari case in 2001, and subsequent decisions

² See <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3360.html>

³ The Australian, UNHCR chief slams 'unfair' screening, 19 June 2013, at www.theaustralian.com.au/news/foi/unhcr-chief-slams-unfair-screening/ story-fn8r0e18-1226665929809

⁴ Australian Lawyers for Human Rights (ALHR), letter to Prime Minister Kevin Rudd, 8 July 2013. At: <http://alhr.asn.au/wp/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/130709-letter-to-PM-Enhanced-Screening.pdf>

⁵ ABC News online : <http://www.abc.net.au/news/2013-06-10/asylum-seeker-enhanced-screenings-dangerous-former-official-says/4744628>. Subsequent reports also appear to support such claims. See for instance, reporting by Nick Olle in the Global Mail, such as: The High-Stakes Mistakes Of "Enhanced Screening", November 25, 2013, <http://www.theglobalmail.org/feature/the-high-stakes-mistakes-of-enhanced-screening/751/>; Immigration Department Denies Enhanced Screenings, November 29, 2013, <http://www.theglobalmail.org/blog/immigration-department-denies-enhanced-screenings/757/index.html>; Operation Enhanced Screenings, October 24, 2013, <http://www.theglobalmail.org/feature/operation-enhanced-screenings/718/index.html>

⁶ The AHRC is concerned that the enhanced screening process may not protect people from refoulement in accordance with Australia's obligations under the CRC, ICCPR, the Convention Against Torture and the Refugee Convention See: www.humanrights.gov.au/publications/tell-me-about-enhanced-screening-process

With perhaps little or no English or education, possible health issues, of different cultural and ethnic backgrounds, perhaps having fled war and persecution from their own State; these children are somehow meant to know they should request that Australian bureaucrats provide them with independent legal and advocacy support. They are somehow meant to understand that their entire bid for safety and protection may rest on these single interviews. They are somehow meant to know the correct “trigger words” to invoke Australia’s protection obligations.

“Enhanced screening” as it has been applied by consecutive Australian Governments is of dubious legal, moral and ethical grounding. By any measure it is an extraordinary and unjust “process” to apply to unaccompanied children seeking our protection.

The Taskforce urge the Commission to recommend the immediate end of “enhanced screening.”

In the context outlined above, we also express our serious concerns with other aspects of our increasingly unjust processing system, such as the imminent introduction of the “Fast Track Assessment”, recent changes to the refugee status determination process, removal of the IAAAS (in which some allowance has been made for vulnerable cohorts but details remain unclear), and ongoing transfers of unaccompanied children and families to Nauru. We urge the Commission to closely scrutinise and to speak out strongly on these developments.

Kind Regards

Misha Coleman
Executive Officer
Australian Churches Refugee Taskforce
Mcoleman@actforpeace.org.au
www.australianchurchesrefugeetaskforce.com.au

We also refer to the Commission to additional academic comment, relevant to this submission:

- Mark Evenhuis (October 2013), Child-Proofing Asylum: Separated Children and Refugee Decision Making in Australia, International Journal of Refugee Law Vol. 25 No. 3 pp. 535–573
- Associate Professor Savitri Taylor , Sri Lankan boat arrivals: enhanced screening, diminished protection, The Conversation, 1 November 2013, <http://theconversation.com/sri-lankan-boat-arrivals-enhanced-screening-diminished-protection-19601>
- Andrew & Renata Kaldor Centre for International Refugee Law, Factsheet: ‘Enhanced Screening’ and ‘Fast Track Policies’, Last updated 7 November 2013, Available at: http://www.kaldorcentre.unsw.edu.au/sites/kaldorcentre.unsw.edu.au/files/enhanced_screening.pdf
- Australian Lawyers for Human Rights (ALHR), letter to Prime Minister Kevin Rudd, 8 July 2013. At: <http://alhr.asn.au/wp/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/130709-letter-to-PM-Enhanced-Screening.pdf>
- Rachel Ball, Human Rights Law Centre, ‘Screening out’ asylum seekers undermines rule of law and risks returning people to face torture, 20 December 2012, <http://www.hrlc.org.au/screening-out-asylum-seekers-undermines-the-rule-of-law-and-risks-returning-people-to-face-torture>

All the Lonely Children

Questions for Policy Makers Regarding
Guardianship for Unaccompanied Minors

DRAFT: OCTOBER 2013

1. Introduction	3
2. Guardianship: duties and obligations	3
3. Ethical and theological perspectives	4
4. Children's rights and the rights framework	4
5. An especially vulnerable cohort	5
6. Onshore detention and resettlement	6
6.1 Conflict of interest - the Minister as guardian, detaining authority and decision maker	6
6.2 Children left alone to navigate the law	8
6.3 Jurisdictional anomalies	9
6.4 Duty of Care and the policy-practice disjuncture	10
6.5 Proposed re-introduction of Temporary Protection Visas (TPV's)	11
7. Offshore detention & resettlement	12
7.1 The PNG resettlement agreement	13
7.2 The Agreement with Nauru	13
7.3 Potential breaches of international law and domestic duties	14

All the Lonely Children

Questions for Policy Makers Regarding
Guardianship for Unaccompanied Minors

Cover Image:
©UNHCR / H. Caux/ July 2010

1. Introduction

The Australian Churches Refugee Taskforce is an initiative of the National Council of Churches in Australia. The Taskforce formally commenced work in April 2013 and currently has over 321 members. The core steering committee is comprised of 18 senior members of churches and church agencies, representing eight Christian churches and three ecumenical bodies from across Australia.

A key concern and focus of the Taskforce is the welfare of refugee and asylum seeking children¹. This paper canvasses the significant existing and emerging concerns regarding the guardianship of these children².

2. Guardianship: duties and obligations

When a child arrives in Australia unaccompanied and without a parent or carer, and without a valid visa, they become a ward of the Commonwealth under the Immigration Guardianship of Children Act 1946 ('IGOC Act')³.

Specifically, the Minister for Immigration and Citizenship ('the Minister') becomes legal guardian of that child, standing in loco parentis, assuming the place of parent and with it 'the same rights, powers, duties, obligations and liabilities as a natural guardian of the child would have'⁴.

The Minister can delegate his or her powers and duties of guardianship to any officer or authority of the Commonwealth or of any State or Territory under section 5 of the IGOC Act. The Minister may also exclude a certain child or group of children from the operation of the IGOC Act.

The Minister can also place a non-citizen child in the custody of an adult who is willing to be the child's custodian and who is, in the opinion of the Minister, a suitable person to be the custodian of that child⁵.

In this respect guardianship of these vulnerable children and young people is not a mere legislative function to be discharged. It is a multifaceted responsibility that encompasses statutory duties, duties under common law, the fulfilment of Australia's international obligations, and a serious moral and ethical concern for the wellbeing of a child that flows from such responsibility.

1 In assuming the role of guardianship, parents, leaders, governments take upon themselves a great responsibility. Such a role can be a means of blessing for the child and society, or an indication of indifference and lack of care at the heart of civil relationships.

2 Children who have been accepted as refugees and are without family are generally supported as part of the Unaccompanied Humanitarian Minors program, referred to as UHMs, whereas children seeking asylum whose status has yet to be determined are supported through the separate Unaccompanied Minors program, often referred to as UAMs.

3 The IGOC Act applies to 'non-citizen' children. A person will be a non-citizen child under the IGOC if he or she falls within the categories outlined in section 4AAA. This requires the person to be: under the age of 18; entering Australia as a non-citizen and with the intention of becoming a permanent resident; and without a parent, adult relative or adoptive parent. Section 6 of the IGOC Act provides that the Minister shall be the guardian of every non-citizen child - until the child reaches the age of 18 years or leaves Australia permanently, or until the provisions of this Act cease to apply to and in relation to the child, whichever first happens. Amendments made in 2012 clarify that a non-citizen child will 'leave Australia permanently' if he or she is removed from Australia under section 198 or 199 of the Migration Act 1958; or is taken from Australia to a regional processing country under section 198AD of the Migration Act.

4 Section 6(1) Immigration Guardianship of Children Act 1946 ('IGOC Act').

5 The IGOC Regulations provide further guidance as to the process for appointing a custodian, and in relation to the duties of custodians, which include duties commensurate to those of a foster parent, under the laws of the State in which the custodian lives.

3. Ethical and theological perspectives

Those who are given the role of guardians have as their first responsibility the need to make available the supportive caring relationships that are necessary for children to flourish.

If that supportive network is denied, all evidence points to children suffering the spiritual, psychological and sociological consequences of this privation for the rest of their life.

Care for children stands at the heart of Jesus' message, teaching and example. He both blesses children and warns those who have control over them. It is when the disciples are arguing about matters of authority and control, that Jesus sets children before them and blesses them and declares that in the sight of God not only are the children precious in themselves, but they are indicators of the nature of the reign of God.

In the strongest terms possible Jesus also warns those responsible for children not to despise them, or become a stumbling block, or cause children to stumble (Matt 18). Parents too are warned about provoking their children so that they do not lose heart (Col 3:21). Children are fully human, a blessing from God.

The early church also saw in Jesus' attitude to children the reality of the fact that we are all made in the image of God and from God's point of view 'children of God'. Jesus and the Church after him have underlined the prophet's focus on the care for the orphan and children in need as an ethical marker that God gives to individuals and nations alike.

In assuming the role of guardianship, parents, leaders, governments take upon themselves a great responsibility. Such a role can be a means of blessing for the child and society, or an indication of indifference and lack of care at the heart of civil relationships.

4. Children's rights and the rights framework

Australia is a signatory to the Convention on the Rights of the Child ('CROC'), one of the six 'core human rights treaties' that underpins our international human rights framework⁶. The CROC provides a critical cornerstone for protecting children's rights and monitoring the obligations of States towards them.

The four fundamental principles that underpin the CRC framework are: non-discrimination; survival; development and protection; participation; and the best interests of the child. The latter is perhaps the most important in any discussion of unaccompanied children. Enshrined in Article 3(1), it is further reinforced by Article 18(1) which states '... the best interests of the child will be [the legal guardian's] basic concern.'⁷

Some of the key rights related to unaccompanied children under the CROC include:

- ▶ children should not be detained unlawfully or arbitrarily (Art 37(b));
- ▶ children must only be detained as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time (Art 37(b));
- ▶ children in detention:
 - ▶ should be treated with respect and humanity, in a manner that takes into account their age and developmental needs (Art 37(c));
 - ▶ have the right to challenge the legality of their detention before a court or other independent and impartial authority (Art 37(d));
- ▶ children seeking asylum have a right to protection and assistance - because they are an especially vulnerable group of children (Art 22);
- ▶ children have a right to family reunification (Art 10); and
- ▶ children who have suffered trauma have a right to rehabilitative care - recovery and social reintegration (Art 39).

6 See: www.unicef.org/crc/index_framework.html and www.unicef.org.au/Discover/What-We-Do/Convention-on-the-Rights-of-the-Child.aspx. Australia's current treatment of unaccompanied children also raises issues under the Refugee Convention, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), and Convention Against Torture (CAT).

7 The Australian Human Rights Commission (AHRC) argues that article 18(1) suggests that the best interests of an unaccompanied child must not only be a primary consideration (as suggested by art 3(1)) but the primary consideration for their legal guardian. See: Immigration Detention on Christmas Island: Observations from visit to immigration detention facilities on Christmas Island, 2012, p.13.

Like any other children, unaccompanied children also have a range of rights that are protected under the CROC, which include rights to physical and mental health, education; culture, language and religion; rest and play; protection from violence; to remain with their parents or to be reunited.

As a signatory to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, Australia is required to report regularly to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child on progress made in ensuring children enjoy in practice the rights given to them under the Convention: Article 44.

5. An especially vulnerable cohort

Regardless of their legal status or method of entry to Australia, unaccompanied children are a particularly vulnerable group. Separated from their families, many have experienced lengthy periods without safety or stability in transit and detention, be that overseas or in Australia, have histories of trauma and as a result many have serious and complex mental and physical health needs.

An extensive body of research and literature has clearly established the unique developmental challenges that frequently manifest within this cohort⁸.

These unique challenges to their mental and physical wellbeing must be taken into account when considering what is in their best interests and in the drafting of any policy or programming likely to affect them.

It is noted with great concern that Australia's current approach to the treatment of unaccompanied asylum seeker children is centred on "deterrence"⁹ families seeking asylum from encouraging unaccompanied minors to travel to Australia by boat,¹⁰ yet little has been done in the last 12 months to alleviate the situation of the thousands waiting in unsafe situations in transit countries, such as Indonesia.¹¹

8 See for instance the discussion in the Senate Joint Select Committee on Australia's Immigration Detention Network, Final Report, March 2012, from page 123; and Mary Crock & Mary Anne Kenny (2012), Rethinking the Guardianship of Refugee Children after the Malaysian Solution, Sydney Law Review, [vol 34:437], p.439, footnote 6.

9 Deterrence measures aim to prevent asylum seekers coming to Australia. They privilege particular constructions of state sovereignty over any international or multilateral commitments to non-citizens (in this case those seeking our protection). In this respect a deterrence framework is antithetical to a humanitarian based protection framework. As the UNHCR warned in late 2012 of Australia's then protection framework: 'the humanitarian, ethical and legal basis of international refugee protection was in danger of being lost if public debate continued to be based primarily on the idea of deterrence.' See: http://unhcr.org.au/unhcr/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=278:unhcr-calls-for-compassion-and-legal-principles-to-be-at-centre-of-policy-responses&catid=35:news-a-media&Itemid=63.

We have since moved towards a framework that is explicitly and primarily deterrence based.'

10 This includes an undertaking by the previous Rudd Government to transfer asylum seekers, including unaccompanied minors to Manus Island in PNG and Nauru under regional resettlement arrangements. The current Coalition Government election policies also flagged a significant ramping up of offshore processing, and boat turn backs, amongst others.

11 During the year 2012 Human Rights Watch estimated (conservatively) that at least 1,178 unaccompanied children entered Indonesia. Human Rights watch further documented the detention, abuse and neglect of these children in their report Barely Surviving, released 24 June 2013, see: <http://www.hrw.org/reports/2013/06/23/barely-surviving>. Yet despite the recommendations of the Expert Panel in August 2012, and acceptance of their recommendations in full by the former Labor government, it has been reported that less than 20 unaccompanied children were accepted in Australia's humanitarian program during this past year from Indonesia.

A deterrence based approach is also a contributing factor to Australia now having record numbers of children being held in immigration detention. As at 31 August 2013 there were:

—1743 children in immigration detention facilities and alternative places of detention (APODs);

—1393 children in community under a residence determination (i.e. community detention); and

—1543 children in the community on a Bridging Visa E (including people in a re-grant process).

This is despite the fact that it is in breach of the CROC, and that there is little to no evidence that “deterrence” based policies actually work.

Also of significant concern in this regard is the stated intention of the current Government to withdraw legal advice and representation to those people who arrive by boat seeking asylum, and the implementation of the 48 hour turnaround target for screening asylum seekers in order to send them offshore, which have seemingly been coupled with a “no exemptions” approach (see further below).

6. Onshore detention and resettlement

6.1 Conflict of interest - the Minister as guardian, detaining authority and decision maker

Within Australia, the overarching issue regarding the guardianship of unaccompanied asylum seeker children (UAMs) is the significant conflict of interest that arises for the Minister in his/her role as decision maker in various respects under the Migration Act 1958 (Migration Act), and as legal guardian under the IGOC Act.

It is a serious conflict that has been repeatedly raised and condemned both domestically and internationally over the last decade.¹²

After years of litigation and frequent legislative amendment, the broad outcome of this (ongoing) debate is that the Minister is not penalised for failing to consider or act in the best interests of the vulnerable asylum seeker children in their care even though under law he/she has that obligation. This is because the specific powers of the Migration Act have generally been held to take precedence over the broad operation of the ICOG Act.

Even in circumstances where the Minister delegates this guardianship duties to a Commonwealth officer or State authorities, this conflict persists as the ‘delegate is also perceived at law to have a conflict of interest in any conflict between the child and the state.’¹³ Moreover, following the High Court challenge to the “Malaysia refugee-swap deal” negotiated by the previous Labor Government, amendments were made with the Migration Legislation Amendment (Regional Processing and Other Measures) Act 2012, to ensure that the IGOC Act remained legislatively subordinated to the Migration Act.¹⁴

12 For instance see: Senate Joint Select Committee on Australia’s Immigration Detention Network, Final Report, March 2012: http://www.aph.gov.au/Parliamentary_Business/Committees/Senate_Committees?url=immigration_detention_ctte/immigration_detention/index.htm and Australian Human Rights Commission’s, National Inquiry into Children in Immigration Detention A last resort? the report of the National Inquiry into Children in Immigration Detention tabled in Parliament on 13 May 2004.

13 Crock & Kenny (2012), p.448, quoting Crock (2004).

14 See further at: <http://www.immi.gov.au/legislation/amendments/2012/120818/lc18082012-01.htm>

There has also been a strong preference by respective Ministers to delegate guardianship powers and duties under the IGOC Act to Commonwealth and State and Territory officials, often resulting in individual officials having guardianship responsibilities for a large number of vulnerable children, in addition to other responsibilities. While custodial arrangements can then be made for these children by the guardian, it is unclear whether this is resulting in the appointment of custodians who have the capacity to take a personal and active interest in the rights and interests of these children.¹⁵

Limited information is publicly available that outlines the day to day care arrangements for unaccompanied minors in immigration detention facilities and in community detention facilities, and existing guidelines and regulations in this area, such as the Immigration (Guardianship of Children) Regulations 2001, fail to include the full range of human rights obligations that Australia has assumed as a party to the CROC.

In April 2012 a Joint Select Committee into Australia's Immigration Detention Network recommended that the Minister be replaced as the legal guardian of unaccompanied minors in the immigration detention system.¹⁶ And in 2012, the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child noted its "deep concern" that the best interests of the child were not 'the primary consideration in...determinations and when considered, not consistently undertaken by professionals with adequate training.' The Committee also noted the continuing 'high risk of conflict of interest' and lack of redress for children adversely affected.¹⁷

¹⁵ In terms of the legal process for delegating guardianship, this is outlined in sections 5 and 7 of the IGOC Act and Regulations 8-11 of the Immigration (Guardianship of Children) Regulations 2001 - which provide for a system of appointment of 'custodians' - for eg. an adult relative, family friend or NGO officer (such as Life Without Barriers), or State or Territory authority if the person is in community detention, or if in immigration detention a sub-contracted organisational employee (such as a Maximus Solutions employee).

¹⁶ Recommendation 19 - Joint Select Committee on Australia's Immigration Detention Network, Final Report, March 2012.

¹⁷ UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (28 August 2012), Consideration of reports submitted by States parties under article 44 of the Convention, CRC/C/AUS/CO/4, p.19 at: www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/crc/docs/co/CRC_C_AUS_CO_4.pdf

ACRT COMMENT

The Taskforce is deeply concerned by the ongoing conflict inherent in the Minister's dual position as the legal guardian of unaccompanied children under the IGOC Act and the decision maker in terms of their visa status under the Migration Act.

At present it is difficult to be confident that the processes for delegating guardianship and appointing custodians adhere to the full range of Australia's human rights obligations in this area, including those under the CROC. It is imperative that clear lines of responsibility and accountability be made publicly available and transparent regarding these vulnerable unaccompanied children and young people.

QUESTIONS FOR GOVERNMENT

1. Who specifically is the delegated guardian in each of the mainland detention facilities/alternative places of detention (APODs)?
2. What arrangements are being made to provide for the day to day care for unaccompanied children in detention? For example, are custodians being appointed under the IGOC Act?
3. If so, how many children does each custodian have responsibility for, how are decisions made about the child in the case of an emergency (eg medical) and what processes are in place to ensure that these custodians are acting in the best interests of the child?

6.2 Children left alone to navigate the law

Intensifying the seriousness of this conflict is the burden of navigating Australia's complex refugee determination processing system.¹⁸ This is largely left to the child seeking asylum, as the Minister is not compelled, as their guardian, to facilitate their applications for asylum, nor to 'ensure that the children are made aware of their legal entitlements.'¹⁹

Extremely limited practical support is available to children seeking to navigate this system or to understand and give effect to their full range of legal rights. This is especially demonstrated in relation to the application of enhanced screening processes that have been applied to Sri Lankans and the transfer of UAM's to off-shore processing centres.

Enhanced screening has been described as "unfair and unreliable" by Richard Towle, the UNHCR regional representative,²⁰ and both the Australian Lawyers for Human Rights (ALHR) and the Australian Human Rights Commission (AHRC) have expressed concern that it does not afford procedural justice, risks refoulement, and is not in accordance with Australia's international obligations.²¹ A former Immigration official previously intimately involved in the process also expressed similar fears of these dangers.²² Both the ALHR and AHRC have also raised particular concerns for unaccompanied children, their lack of support or legal assistance during this process, and that they are especially at risk and 'require special protections and safeguards.'²³

Another example arises in relation to age determination processes applied to UAM's. A child may face serious difficulties establishing his or her status as a minor, particularly in the context of a screening interview with Immigration officers where access to legal and other support services may not be provided.

18 We note that s46A(2) of the Migration Act allows the Minister to 'lift the bar' and permit an 'unauthorised maritime arrival' to make an application for a protection visa. Also that s256 provides that people in immigration detention should have access to application forms for a visa and facilities for making a statutory declaration or for obtaining legal advice or taking legal proceedings in relation to his or her immigration detention.

19 Crock & Kenny (2012), p.452. See discussion 450-453 of Jaffari case in 2001, and subsequent decisions.

20 The Australian, UNHCR chief slams 'unfair' screening, 19 June 2013, at: <http://www.theaustralian.com.au/news/foi/unhcr-chief-slams-unfair-screening/story-fn8rOe18-1226665929809>

21 Australian Lawyers for Human Rights (ALHR), letter to Prime Minister Kevin Rudd, 8 July 2013. The AHRC is concerned that the enhanced screening process may not protect people from refoulement in accordance with Australia's obligations under the CRC, ICCPR, the Convention Against Torture and the Refugee Convention. See: <http://www.humanrights.gov.au/publications/tell-me-about-enhanced-screening-process>

22 ABC News online: <http://www.abc.net.au/news/2013-06-10/asylum-seeker-enhanced-screenings-dangerous-former-official-says/4744628>

23 Australian Lawyers for Human Rights (ALHR), letter to Prime Minister Kevin Rudd, 8 July 2013

While interpreters are used and an independent observer is supposed to be present, there is no provision as of right to legal assistance or advice. Independent observers, if present, have limited capacity and so the child is without the benefit of a support person who is able to actively monitor and advocate for their interests.²⁴

The child is unable to access legal assistance through the IAAAS,²⁵ yet evidence adduced during such interviews and findings made, remain on the DIAC file, ie. in relation to credibility, and can severely impact upon the child's subsequent application for protection.²⁶

The Coalition Government's proposed changes to the refugee status determination process and withdrawal of legal representation, also raise significant questions and are of great concern, in particular for their potential impact on unaccompanied children. It is noted that the UNHCR Guidelines on Policies and Procedures in Dealing with Unaccompanied Children Seeking Asylum²⁷ specifically recommend: '..an asylum-seeking child should be represented by an adult who is familiar with the child's background and who would protect his/her interests. Interviews should be conducted by specially qualified and trained officials. Appeals should be processed as expeditiously as possible. In the examination of the factual elements of the claim of an unaccompanied child, particular regard should be given to circumstances such as the child's stage of development, his/her possibly limited knowledge of conditions in the country of origin, and their significance to the legal concept of refugee status, as well as his/her special vulnerability.'

The changes proposed to the refugee status determination process include removing appeals to the Refugee Review Tribunal and putting in place an administrative (non-statutory) assessment and review process in which Immigration officials would be both decision maker and reviewer.

It would also be coupled with a new 'Fast Track Assessment and Removal process...modelled on the Detained Fast Track system in the United Kingdom.'²⁸

24 See for eg: Australian Human Rights Commission, Immigration Detention on Christmas Island: Observations from visit to immigration detention facilities on Christmas Island, 2012, p.13. Even when 'Independent observers' are present, their ability to 'act in the best interests of the child' is severely curtailed by their inability to take any casework, advocacy or investigative role, as set out in the DIAC Procedures Advice Manual, section 22

25 Immigration Advice and Application Assistance Scheme, see: <http://www.immi.gov.au/media/fact-sheets/63advice.htm>

26 In this respect the Migration Act 1958 (Cth) arguably fails to provide legislative protection of a child's rights under Article 12(2) of the CROC.

27 See <http://www.refworld.org/docid/3ae6b3360.html>

28 The Coalition's Policy to Clear Labor's 30,000 Border Failure Backlog, p.7.

ACRT COMMENT

Many churches are witnessing first-hand the struggles being experienced by asylum seekers who are turning to church welfare agencies for support and basic assistance. Pro-bono legal services are also limited and will not be able to meet demand.

Withdrawing access to the IAAAS will force a desperate search for legal assistance or the financial means to access such assistance, and will make asylum seekers ever more vulnerable to exploitation. The Taskforce believes that withdrawing publicly funded legal assistance will have an enormous and detrimental impact on asylum seekers, in particular unaccompanied children. It is difficult to see how this policy, in combination with the flagged changes to processing, will afford a just process and allow refugees a fair go at having their claims for protection heard. It increases the risks that unaccompanied minors may be refouled. The Taskforce strongly urges the Government to reconsider these measures, to ensure that children have access to government funded independent legal advice and assistance, and that any changes to the processing system are accompanied by sufficient safeguards to protect the best interests of the child.

QUESTIONS FOR GOVERNMENT

4. Where are 'enhanced screening' assessments & interviews taking place? If specific support is not being provided to children, are the Immigration officials conducting the interviews trained appropriately to deal with and assess traumatised children and young people?

5. Who is the delegated guardian when children are on Christmas Island (or other detention facility) and undergoing these screenings? Why aren't they or other persons actively involved in protecting the child's interests?

6. Will children be exempt from the proposed "fast track" system as they are in the UK? How will unaccompanied children be dealt with under the proposed changes to the refugee status determination process? What safeguards will be put in place to ensure their best interests of the child are taken into account and children's rights are protected?

7. Will the IAAAS continue to be available to unaccompanied children? If not, will other alternative support for legal advocacy and assistance be made available?

6.3 Jurisdictional anomalies

An additional layer of complexity exists in relation to unaccompanied children, between the operation of the Commonwealth laws, such as the IGOA Act and the relevant State or Territory laws. In particular this applies to the humanitarian minors program (UHM), as the Commonwealth must separately negotiate arrangements for the care of unaccompanied children with each of the States and Territories, with their welfare agencies being delegated guardianship duties under these arrangements. This has led to:

- ▶ Different agreements, with differing levels of support and care and across jurisdictions, with no national framework to ensure a consistent standard of care;
- ▶ As a result of these anomalies, there are instances of children having to relocate across jurisdictions in order to receive appropriate care;²⁹
- ▶ Children being compelled in some cases to seek their own placements with carers who may not be well placed or able to care for them, which can result in cases of a breakdown in guardianship arrangements;³⁰
- ▶ In some instances UHM's unable to access complementary services / supports provided by the State, which may be accessible to non-refugee wards or other children;³¹
- ▶ Ongoing shortcomings in transitional arrangements, such as when a young refugee person either becomes an Australian citizen, or turns 18 and must exit the UHM program.³²

The granting of refugee status and a permanent protection visa should mark the beginning of a new period of stability and settlement for an unaccompanied refugee child or young person. Yet there have been cases in which young people have had to move interstate in order to access the support and services they need (for example, where their claims for protection have been accepted and they have transitioned from the UAM (asylum seeker) to UHM (humanitarian) programs, but no support was available in that State). Not only is such movement exceedingly destabilising, but often the young people will return to the State in which they have community connections or other opportunities, such as work.

²⁹ Multicultural Youth Advocacy Network (MYAN), Unaccompanied Humanitarian Minors in Australia, Policy Paper, September 2012, p.13.

³⁰ MYAN Policy Paper p.14.

³¹ MYAN Policy Paper p.16.

³² It is a particularly vulnerable period, in which transitional care plans can often lack arrangements for the ongoing mental and physical health care requirements of these young people. See: RCOA Australia's Refugee and Humanitarian Program 2013-14: RCOA submission, p.72

There can be resultant confusion or delay in transfer of delegated guardianship arrangements (across jurisdictions) and subsequently also referrals to agencies, resulting in ongoing difficulties for these young people in accessing support and/or effectively being left without an active guardian.³³

QUESTIONS FOR GOVERNMENT

8. What is the current state of agreements between the Department of Immigration and each State and Territory? For instance NSW has been a state of concern, from which many young people have reportedly had to move, and it remains unclear as to whether a new agreement has been negotiated or will be put in place?

9. What is being done to address these anomalies and ensure guardianship responsibilities are clearly delegated and understood at all stages of transition?

Many young people are also turning 18 either in the system, or shortly after exiting mandatory detention.

It is a serious concern that, having just experienced months or possibly years in dangerous transit then detention, with little stability or safety, that these traumatised young people might be released into the community on permanent visas or bridging visas (without work rights) or sufficient support.

6.4 Duty of Care and the policy-practice disjuncture

The various duties and obligations under both domestic and international law, which the Minister and the Department of Immigration, are required to exercise and safeguard are in many respects, non-delegable.³⁴ For example, common law duties of care mean that even where the Department contracts out services, the third party must take 'reasonable care to avoid the persons in immigration detention suffering reasonably foreseeable harm' and if they breach these duties, the Department is also taken to have breached their duties.³⁵ Certainly the high level duty of care that is owed, and what this entails is well noted within their various policies and operational manuals of the Department.

For instance, the DIAC Procedures Advice Manual notes of minors in immigration detention that they:

- ▶ require special care above and beyond the standard of care required for adult person, because they are particularly vulnerable;
- ▶ decisions must consider the best interests of the minor – this is not restricted to the child's legally enforceable rights but also long-term and short-term welfare concerns, physical and emotional well-being, financial, moral, religious and health interests;
- ▶ minors should only be detained as a measure of last resort and for the shortest practicable time; and
- ▶ making decisions in best interest requires detention staff to be trained appropriately to deal with minors and in age appropriate behaviours and development.³⁶

34 See for instance the Parliamentary Joint Committee on Human Rights report on the Migration Legislation Amendment (Regional Processing and Other Measures) Act 2012 and related legislation which outlines in detail Australia's human rights obligations relating to offshore processing and why these obligations cannot be transferred: http://www.aph.gov.au/Parliamentary_Business/Committees/Senate_Committees?url=humanrights_ctte/reports/2013/9_2013/index.htm

35 In S v Secretary, Department of Immigration & Multicultural & Indigenous Affairs (2005) 216 ALR 252, the court held that the Commonwealth's duty of care was not delegable on the basis of the complex outsourcing arrangements. The Commonwealth had the responsibility to ensure the provision of medical and psychiatric services was adequate and effective.

36 DIAC Procedures Advice Manual, August 2013. See section 9, dealing with minors.

33 These issues have been raised with the ACRT through members who have had first-hand experience of the disruption. See also MYAN Policy Paper p.13.

ACRT COMMENT

There is a serious disjuncture between the duties owed by the Minister and Department, including those clearly acknowledged and stated in policy, and how unaccompanied minors are being treated in practice. The requisite standards required in detention centres and while children are contained within the immigration detention network, are simply not being met and the duty of care towards these young people is consistently breached on a number of fronts.³⁷ Anomalies persist too across the spectrum in our dealings with unaccompanied minors, even as children are accepted as refugees and are permanently settled into our community.

In essence, we are failing in our duties towards these children, a situation that is compounded by the lack of transparency and accountability across the system. As a first step to remedying this situation, we suggest an independent advisory body could be immediately established to specifically monitor, report on, and provide advice regarding asylum seeker and refugee children across the spectrum of service delivery and support.

6.5 Proposed re-introduction of Temporary Protection Visa's (TPV's)

The Coalition Government has proposed reintroducing Temporary Protection visa's for asylum seekers arriving by boat who are found to be refugees. As outlined in their election policies this would include that:

- ▶ 'no permanent visa will be issued' to the estimated 30,000 asylum seekers already in Australia (including the record number of children in detention);
- ▶ TPV's would not exceed 3 years (effectively meaning a refugee must reprove their claim for protection in order to receive another TPV);³⁸
- ▶ settlement services would be limited, if available at all; and
- ▶ refugees who arrived by boat would be denied access to family reunion.

The devastating mental health and wellbeing, and associated impacts of TPV's were well documented during the period they were previously in use from 1999-2007. The National Inquiry into Children in Immigration Detention by AHRC (tabled in Parliament in 2004) found that the TPV regime breached seven articles of the CROC,³⁹ and summarised that the evidence showed two very significant barriers faced by children:

1. Their temporary status created 'a deep uncertainty and anxiety about their future. This can exacerbate existing mental health problems from their time in detention and their past history of persecution.' And also affected their 'capacity to fully participate in the educational opportunities'; and
2. The effect of the family reunion and travel ban meant that 'some children may be separated from their parents or family for a long, potentially indefinite, period of time. Again, this can undermine a child's mental health and well-being.'⁴⁰

³⁸ In this respect the claim that TPV's are consistent with the Refugee Convention is highly contested and the stronger argument is that they are a breach of international law. Temporary protection is valid in international law as an 'exceptional mechanism', where mass movements are taking place. It is not intended to replace protection under the Geneva Convention, nor to be used as a "punitive" or "deterrence" measure.

³⁹ These breaches were of articles 3(1) best interest of the child, 6(2) ensuring the survival and development of a child, 10(1) right to family reunification, 20(1) right to special protection and assistance when deprived of family, 22(1) appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance for asylum seeking child, 24(1) right to health services and rehabilitation and 39 right to rehabilitative care - recovery and social reintegration - after suffering trauma. See 16.4.5, Australian Human Rights Commission A last resort? National Inquiry into Children in Immigration Detention, 2004 at: <http://www.humanrights.gov.au/publications/untitled-document-1>. The issues canvassed in the report also point to breaches of other international law instruments, such as the Refugee Convention.

⁴⁰ See: <https://www.humanrights.gov.au/publications/last-resort-summary-guide-temporary-protection-visas>

The AHRC further noted that these TPV conditions had a 'proportionally greater impact on unaccompanied refugee children than upon other children due to their isolation from their family.'⁴¹

ACRT COMMENT

Considering the significant and documented adverse impacts on children, in particular unaccompanied children, and possible breaches of their rights under the CROC, the Taskforce are extremely concerned by the proposed reintroduction of TPV's.

7. Offshore detention & resettlement

Recent changes to the Migration Act have allowed the Minister power to designate a country as a 'regional processing country' if in the 'national interest.'

At the same time amendments were made to the *IGOC Act*⁴² to ensure that the Minister's guardianship duties cease when an unaccompanied asylum seeking child is removed to such a processing country in accordance with the Migration Act.

The changes to the Migration Act have meant the designated processing country need not be scrutinised for their human rights record or capacity, they need only give (non-binding) assurances as to refoulement and demonstrate a willingness to assess protection applications.⁴³

⁴¹ See 16.7, Australian Human Rights Commission A last resort? National Inquiry into Children in Immigration Detention, 2004 at: <http://www.humanrights.gov.au/publications/untitled-document-1>

⁴² This is given effect under ss 6(1) and (2)(b) of the IGOC Act.

⁴³ Crock and Kenny (2012). p.462

7.1 The PNG resettlement agreement

The former Immigration Minister confirmed that under the Regional Resettlement Agreement struck with PNG on 19 July 2013 ('the PNG Agreement')⁴⁴, the Minister would no longer be the legal guardian once unaccompanied minors are transferred to Manus Island.⁴⁵

The two page PNG Agreement was followed by the signing of an MOU Relating to the transfer to, and assessment and settlement in, Papua New Guinea of certain persons, and related issues on 6th September 2013.⁴⁶ The MOU provides that 'special arrangements will be developed and agreed to by the Participants for vulnerable cases, including unaccompanied minors.'⁴⁷

In addition, PNG agreed to other undertakings not to expel or send transferees to another country where their lives would be threatened or they may be subject to persecution, and to either make or permit assessments of refugee applications.⁴⁸ Yet these arrangement still lack a range of details as to how specifically vulnerable, unaccompanied children might be dealt with once sent to Manus Island.

UNICEF have noted that 'children in Papua New Guinea remain some of the most vulnerable children in the world.'⁴⁹

In addition that:

*'As many as half the primary school-age children are out of school. Half of those who enrol drop out before grade six. Many of the schools lack basic facilities such as safe water and toilet facilities as well as furniture and teaching aids. Young people are often denied their right to continuous learning and access to income. Youth unemployment rate is on the increase. Opportunities for young people to express their views are extremely limited. Most services are not young people friendly. Despite great traditions, violence against women and children and physical and sexual abuse of children are widely prevalent and a major threat to Papua New Guinea's development.'*⁵⁰

It has been suggested that the courts may be responsible for assigning guardianship, but it is currently unclear what regime unaccompanied children sent to PNG would be administered under.

44 The PNG Agreement is available at: <http://www.immi.gov.au/>

45 See ABC news online, Burke confirms his guardian role limited under PNG plan, 24th July 2013 at: www.abc.net.au/pm/content/2013/s3810192.htm

46 The MOU with PNG is available at: <http://www.dfat.gov.au/geo/png/joint-mou-20130806.html>

47 MOU with PNG, provision 18.

48 MOU with PNG, provision 20.

49 See: http://www.unicef.org/png/activities_4362.html

50 See: http://www.unicef.org/png/activities_3825.html

QUESTIONS FOR GOVERNMENT

10. Please clarify who, if anyone, assumes guardianship for children without guardians who are sent to PNG, and what might happen in the case of those young people who may not be recognised as children under PNG law?

7.2 The Agreement with Nauru

Like the PNG Agreement and MOU, the MOU signed with Nauru on the 3rd August 2013, *Relating to the transfer and Assessment of Persons in Nauru, and Related Issues*⁵¹ also provides for 'special arrangements...including unaccompanied minors'⁵² and undertakings about the expulsion of transferees to another country, and permitting assessments of refugee applications.⁵³

Nauru does have legislative provision under their existing Guardianship of Children Act 1975 (Nauru) for the courts to make determinations about guardianship. It also has in place the Asylum Seekers (Regional Processing Centre) Act 2012 (Nauru), which sets out that in the treatment of children, regard must be had to the CROC.⁵⁴ It also establishes that the Minister will be the guardian of unaccompanied minors, with the same powers as would apply if appointed under the Guardianship Act, and that they may delegate in writing any of those powers or functions to a 'fit and proper person' within a corporation working for the 'welfare and protection of children.'⁵⁵

However there is much that is uncertain about both the PNG and Nauruan arrangements. For example, although the MOUs include assurances that transferred asylum seekers will not be returned to a place where they fear persecution, there is no clear sense of what legal and administrative processes will apply in these countries or how this could be guaranteed. It is also unclear if asylum seekers transferred to PNG will have access to adequate legal assistance or will be able to seek independent merits review of negative decisions.

51 MOU found at: <http://www.dfat.gov.au/issues/people-smuggling-mou.html>

52 MOU with Nauru, provision 18.

53 MOU with Nauru, provision 19.

54 s14, Asylum Seekers (Regional Processing Centre) Act 2012 (Nauru), available at: http://ronlaw.gov.nr/nauru_ljms/index.php/act/view/1081

55 s15, Asylum Seekers (Regional Processing Centre) Act 2012 (Nauru)

7.3 Potential breaches of international law and domestic duties

Under this regime, which is yet to be tested in the courts, it is arguable that Australia is in breach of obligations, including:⁵⁶

- ▶ Under the CROC to ensure the best interests of the child are a primary consideration (Art 3) and potentially under Art 20(1)) to provide child asylum seekers with human rights protections and humanitarian assistance;
- ▶ Being likely to violate its obligation under Art 31 of the Refugee Convention not to penalise an asylum seeker on account of their “illegal” mode of entry to Australia. (For instance asylum seekers arriving by boat being treated differentially to those arriving by plane, in part because of “deterrence”), potentially too Art 33 prohibiting refoulment;
- ▶ Breaching Art 9 of the ICCPR prohibiting arbitrary and indefinite detention as people will be detained in PNG for extended periods in conditions that are unfit for purpose and do not meet international standards. Potentially too, Art 26 providing for equal protection before the law.
- ▶ Interfering with families in a manner contrary to the right to family life, in that family is ‘the natural and fundamental group unit of society’ and should be accorded ‘the widest possible protection and assistance’ under the ICESCR (Art 10).⁵⁷
- ▶ The Minister also risks breaching both statutory and common law duties to these children. In particular, as the socio-economic conditions in both Nauru and PNG raise concerns that any children sent there will face the prospect of further psychological and physical harm. This is further accentuated by the likelihood that PNG and Nauru will not have the capacity to undertake refugee status determination processes in a suitably rigorous way.

The UNHCR had previously stated its belief that Australia’s excision of the mainland and changes to the Migration Act did not absolve it of its responsibilities towards asylum seekers, that their expectation was that any asylum-seeker arriving in Australia would be given access to ‘a

56 See for instance the Parliamentary Joint Committee on Human Rights report on the Migration Legislation Amendment (Regional Processing and Other Measures) Act 2012 and related legislation, June 2013; a discussion by Ben Saul, The new asylum seeker arrangement between Australia and Papua New Guinea is almost certain not to comply with Australia’s international law obligations; The Conversation, 20 July 2013, at: <http://theconversation.com/rudds-png-plan-unlikely-to-comply-with-international-law-16250>; also Greg Barns in interview above at: www.abc.net.au/pm/content/2013/s3810192.htm; and Politifact, Labor’s Regional Resettlement Arrangement is entirely in accordance with Australia’s international obligations, 19 July 2013, at: <http://www.politifact.com.au/truth-o-meter/statements/2013/aug/01/mark-dreyfus/png-breach-international-law/>

57 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR)

full and efficient refugee status determination process in Australia’, and that if transferred to another country, ‘the legal responsibility for those asylum-seekers may in some circumstances be shared with that other country.’⁵⁸

The Human Rights Law Centre has expanded on this and suggested that ‘Australia’s human rights obligations do not end at our borders. Australia is responsible for those who are within its effective jurisdiction or control even if those people have been transferred abroad.’⁵⁹ At present, it also remains unclear what criteria will be applied by Australian officials as part of any initial checks to determine whether it is safe to send a person to PNG or Nauru.

In relation to the PNG deal, the UNHCR has expressed concern about the arrangements, noting it was ‘troubled by the current absence of adequate protection standards and safeguards.’ It further suggested that ‘[t]hese include a lack of national capacity and expertise in processing, and poor physical conditions within open-ended, mandatory and arbitrary detention settings. This can be harmful to the physical and psycho-social well-being of transferees, particularly families and children.’⁶⁰ This view has been echoed by the AHRC, who has also expressed concern that it may ‘violate fundamental human rights.’⁶¹ Similarly concerns are being raised about the capacity of Nauru, and conditions on the island, in particular for children.

Finally, the Coalition Government policy aims to quickly expand capacity at Manus and Nauru, including an additional 2000 places on Nauru. In the first two weeks in office, this was coupled with the introduction of rapid transfer procedures, with 48 hour “turnaround” targets for those asylum seekers reaching Australia.

58 UNHCR, New “excision” law does not relieve Australia of its responsibilities towards asylum-seekers, UNHCR Press Releases, 22 May 2013, at: <http://www.unhcr.org/519ccec96.html>

59 Human Rights Law Centre, Letter to Parliamentary Joint Committee on Human Rights, 23 Jan 2011, Examination of Migration Legislation Amendment (Regional Processing and Other Measures) Act 2012 and related bills and instruments - answer to question taken on notice at public hearing, at: <http://www.hrlc.org.au/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/HRLC-response-to-question-on-notice.pdf>; this disjuncture was also well documented by the Joint Parliamentary Committee on Australia’s Immigration Network June 2012 Inquiry.

60 UNHCR, Australia-Papua New Guinea asylum agreement presents protection challenges, 26 July 2013 at: http://unhcr.org.au/unhcr/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=344:unhcr-australia-papua-new-guinea-asylum-agreement-presents-protection-challenges-&catid=35:news-media&Itemid=63

61 See: <http://www.humanrights.gov.au/news/media-releases/human-rights-concerns-regional-resettlement-arrangement>

Previously they would have been subject to proper health and security checks in Australia, taking weeks.

The Australian Medical Association, amongst others, has expressed serious concerns about this practice.⁶² During this same period, reports emerged about unaccompanied children potentially being secretly transferred offshore, possibly to Nauru or Manus.⁶³

ACRT COMMENT

The latest offshore processing and settlement arrangements are extremely concerning to the Taskforce. There is little to no reason to have confidence that these arrangements will honour all of Australia's international legal obligations or reflect the fundamental rule of law and natural justice on which we rely and deeply value in Australia.

These policies represent an unconscionable abrogation of our rights and duties towards the unaccompanied children who arrive in Australia seeking our protection and care.

We note and applaud the former Department of Immigration and Citizenship for funding the excellent work done by eminent persons from our region to describe what is required to care for unaccompanied and separated children, and commend these guidelines to the new Federal Government and its departments.⁶⁴

QUESTIONS FOR GOVERNMENT

11. In the context of PNG, what is the definition of a "minor," and what is the legal framework governing the guardianship of unaccompanied minors in PNG?
12. In Nauru, how will the Minister's guardianship powers be delegated and what arrangements will be made for the day to day care of these children to ensure that their rights and wellbeing are protected and promoted?
 - ▶ For example, will custodians be appointed and if so what criteria will govern the appointment of custodians for these children?
 - ▶ How will the Australian Government ensure that the best interests of these children, and their rights under the CRC, are promoted and protected under these arrangements?
13. What systems is Australia putting in place to ensure that the best interests of these children, and their rights under the CROC, are promoted and protected under these arrangements?
14. How can Australia provide effective oversight of regional processing arrangements without committing to similar standards of care for unaccompanied minors in Australian facilities?
15. Are the regional arrangements for children and young people consistent with recommendations made in the Regional Guidelines for Responding to the Rights and Needs of Unaccompanied and Separated Children (UASC), which were funded by DIAC?

⁶² See SBS online: <http://www.sbs.com.au/news/article/2013/09/25/concerns-over-rapid-asylum-seeker-transfers>

⁶³ The Australian, 'Fears minors sent offshore alone', at: <http://www.theaustralian.com.au/national-affairs/policy/fears-minors-sent-offshore-alone/story-fn9hm1gu-1226727236942>

⁶⁴ Sriprapha Petcharamesree & Mark Capaldi, Regional Guidelines for Responding to the Rights and Needs of Unaccompanied and Separated Children (UASC), Commissioned by UNHCR, September, 2012.

Australian Churches Refugee Taskforce

209 Gertrude Street, Fitzroy, VIC 3065

 #ChRefugee  AustralianChurchesRefugeeTaskforce
 info@acrt.com.au  www.acrt.com.au

An initiative supported by National Council of Churches in Australia

The Hon Scott Morrison MP
Minister for Immigration and Border Protection

Ms Misha Coleman
Executive Officer
Australian Churches Refugee Taskforce
Level 4, Causeway House
306 Little Collins Street
MELBOURNE VIC 3000

Dear Ms Coleman,

Australian Churches Refugee Taskforce draft report “All the Lonely Children”

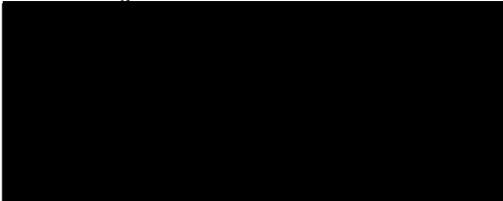

I refer to your letter of 8 October 2013 concerning your draft report “All the Lonely Children” and our subsequent meeting in December 2013. I regret the delay in responding.

Thank you for the opportunity of considering the fifteen questions posed before finalising your report. Please find attached responses to these questions.

During our meeting, you asked a further question regarding birth certificates for children born in immigration detention. I can advise that for children born to parents in immigration detention, detention operations officers will arrange for the submission of a completed Registration of Birth form to the Births, Deaths and Marriage Registration Office in the relevant state/territory. For community detainees, contracted service providers are required to assist the parents to register the baby's birth and to obtain a birth certificate. In both circumstances, the cost is covered by the department.

I trust the information provided is helpful.

Yours sincerely

The Hon Scott Morrison MP
Minister for Immigration and Border Protection

12/2/2014

Response to the Australian Churches Refugee Taskforce

Australian detention:

- Who now (specifically) is the delegated guardian in each of the mainland detention facilities/alternative places of detention (APODs)?
- What arrangements are being made to provide for the day to day care for unaccompanied children in detention? For example, are custodians being appointed under the IGOC Act?
- If so, how many children does each custodian have responsibility for, how are decisions made about the child in the case of an emergency (e.g. medical) and what processes are in place to ensure that these custodians are acting in the best interests of the child?

Under the Immigration (Guardianship of Children) Act 1946 (IGOC Act), the Minister for Immigration and Border Protection (the Minister) is the guardian of certain unaccompanied minors in Australia.

To help meet his guardianship responsibilities, the IGOC Act allows the Minister to delegate a majority of his guardianship powers and functions to officers in the Commonwealth or State or Territory governments. Such officers are referred to as ‘delegated guardians’. Delegation is enlivened by the Instrument of Delegation, which may be amended from time to time. The current instrument was made on 31 May 2013 and provides for the delegations of the Minister’s powers in different circumstances.

All minors who fall within the scope of the IGOC Act (commonly referred to as ‘IGOC minors’) are under the care of a delegated guardian. Guardianship is delegated according to the instrument and local operational needs, often, for example, to the Executive Level 2 Centre Manager. The delegated guardian is responsible for making decisions affecting a minor’s long term welfare and decisions of a non-routine nature as the need arises, whatever the time of day or night.

Within the context of immigration detention, the Minister’s guardianship obligations are discharged through arrangements with service providers who deliver appropriate care, welfare, education and recreational activities. Under section 7 of the IGOC Act, a custodian may be appointed to provide day to day care for IGOC minors. This may be a service provider or a relative of the minor who has agreed to act in this role. Where a service provider is a custodian, the number of minors placed in their care will vary depending on a range of factors including their capacity, location and contractual arrangements.

The custodian can make routine day to day decisions about an IGOC minor. The Immigration (Guardianship of Children) Regulations 2001 require the custodian to notify the delegated guardian of certain serious incidents involving an IGOC minor in their care, ensuring any relevant decisions are able to be made by the delegated guardian. A delegated guardian will make decisions in consultation with the custodian and any relevant experts (such as medical practitioners) and taking into account the minor’s views, giving appropriate weight to their age and maturity.

Older minors may have the maturity and understanding to make certain decisions on their own behalf. Usually, these will be decisions relating to medical treatment.

Over the last three years and since the establishment of a dedicated Children's Unit in the Department of Immigration and Border Protection (the Department), the Department has put in place a number of arrangements and procedures to ensure guardianship responsibilities are clearly delegated and understood.

This includes:

- the development of a range of guidance material;
- the operation of helpdesks to support staff and service providers;
- regular formal and informal consultation with key stakeholders, including delegated guardians and custodians;
- the establishment of a practice management group for delegated guardians;
- improvements to departmental information; and
- regular training sessions.

Legal:

- Where are 'enhanced screening' assessments & interviews taking place? If specific support is not being provided to children, are the Immigration officials conducting the interviews trained appropriately to deal with and assess traumatized children and young people?
- Who is the delegated guardian when children are on Christmas Island (or other detention facility) and undergoing these screenings? Why aren't they or other persons actively involved in protecting the child's interests?
- Will children be exempt from the proposed "fast track" system as they are in the UK? How will unaccompanied children be dealt with under the proposed changes to the refugee status determination process? What safeguards will be put in place to ensure their best interests of the child are taken into account and children's rights are protected?
- Will the IAAAS continue to be available to unaccompanied children? If not, will other alternative support for legal advocacy and assistance be made available?

Enhanced screening interviews usually take place on Christmas Island, and are conducted by an experienced officer with relevant background and training in protection decision making.

Interviewers carefully consider the personal circumstances of the individual being interviewed to ensure that the interview is conducted in a manner sensitive to their circumstances. Where a minor is being interviewed there are arrangements in place to ensure there is an independent observer present at the interview. Additionally, when a child is accompanied by a relative over 21 years of age they are not interviewed separately unless the child specifically makes such a request.

The Department acknowledges the sensitive nature of interviewing minors, and has in place policies for children to be interviewed by experienced, trained decision makers and, if possible, by decision makers who have knowledge of the psychological and emotional development of children, and their behaviour.

Officers are trained in child sensitive questioning techniques and have guidance to assist them. Interviewing officers exercise special care when interviewing children and ensure the interview is conducted in a child-sensitive manner. Departmental policies guide the interviewing officer to take the initiative in actively considering whether the child understands the process and to tailor particular questions, taking into account the child's experience, age and developmental stage.

Responsibility for the care and welfare of unaccompanied minors at immigration detention facilities - including Christmas Island - (irrespective of whether they fall under the IGOC Act) lies with Centre Managers and officers working at the facilities, all of whom have a duty of care in respect of children in the facilities. In relation to enhanced screening, the policy guidelines require that the best interests of the child are a primary consideration when making any decision about the child.

There are a number of arrangements in place when children are subject to the screening process. A suitability assessment is undertaken for all children to assist in determining suitability for enhanced screening, and this is done in consultation with departmental case managers and the Department's health service provider, IHMS. The personal characteristics of a child are considered when determining whether they are suitable for enhanced screening.

Where a minor is being interviewed, there are contractual arrangements in place to ensure an independent observer is present at the interview including:

- the independent observer ensures that the treatment of unaccompanied minors during the interview is fair, appropriate and reasonable.
- where appropriate, the interviewing officer may allow the independent observer to help the minor explain their claims but at the same time ensure that the minor is able to speak for themselves and is given the opportunity to present their claims in their own words.

As part of the Government's pre-election policy, 'Coalition's policy to clear Labor's 30 000 border failure backlog', the Government announced their intention to establish a new Fast Track Assessment and Removal Process, modelled on the United Kingdom's (UK) Detained Fast Track and to conduct a rapid audit of the protection assessment process.

These issues remain under consideration by the Government and no decisions have been announced. To date, there have been no changes to processing, as a result of the rapid audit.

In pre-election commitments, the Government stated they would "withdraw taxpayer funded immigration assistance under IAAAS for those who arrive illegally by boat, or illegally by any other method, to prepare asylum claims and make appeals". Implementation of this commitment, including the way in which it may impact on unaccompanied minors, is one of a range of matters currently being considered by Government.

Domestic jurisdictional:

- What is the current state of agreements between the Department of Immigration and each State and Territory? For instance NSW has been a state of concern, from which many young people have reportedly had to move, and it remains unclear as to whether a new agreement has been negotiated or will be put in place?
- What is being done to address the jurisdictional anomalies and ensure guardianship responsibilities are clearly delegated and understood at all stages of transition?

The Department works with state and territory child welfare agencies (SCWAs) in jurisdictions where unaccompanied humanitarian minors (UHMs, i.e. unaccompanied minors who hold a protection or humanitarian visa) reside, to provide welfare services, such as case management, to UHMs with approved pre-existing carers under Memoranda of Understanding and equivalent agreements. The Department has been working with state and territory governments to ensure nationally consistent service and cost models for the UHMs in their care. Where guardianship responsibilities for the day-to-day care of UHMs has been delegated to state and territory governments, these arrangements are consistent across jurisdictions.

Current procurement for the UHM Programme includes provision for services in NSW through a Commonwealth service provider. The procurement is yet to be completed.

Offshore:

- Please clarify who, if anyone, assumes guardianship for children without guardians who are sent to PNG, and what might happen in the case of those young people who may not be recognised as children under PNG law?
- In the context of PNG, what is the definition of a “minor,” and what is the legal framework governing the guardianship of unaccompanied minors in PNG?
- In Nauru, how will the Minister’s guardianship powers be delegated and what arrangements will be made for the day to day care of these children to ensure that their rights and wellbeing are protected and promoted?
 - For example, will custodians be appointed and if so what criteria will govern the appointment of custodians for these children?
 - How will the Australian Government ensure that the best interests of these children, and their rights under the CRC, are promoted and protected under these arrangements?
- What systems is Australia putting in place to ensure that the best interests of these children, and their rights under the CROC, are promoted and protected under these arrangements?
- How can Australia provide effective oversight of regional processing arrangements without committing to similar standards of care for unaccompanied minors in Australian facilities?
- Are the regional arrangements for children and young people consistent with recommendations made in the Regional Guidelines for Responding to the Rights and Needs of Unaccompanied and Separated Children (UASC), which were funded by DIAC?

Papua New Guinea

The Government’s position is that no minors will be transferred to Papua New Guinea.

Arrangements to support the transfer of children to Nauru

The Governments of Australia and Nauru have worked together to develop appropriate arrangements for the transfer of children to the offshore processing centre (OPC) that comply with Nauruan domestic laws and have regard to relevant international obligations.

Save the Children Australia has been contracted to provide specialised services for all children at the Nauru OPC.

In relation to unaccompanied minors, under the Asylum Seekers (Regional Processing Centre) Act 2012, the Nauruan Minister for Justice and Border Control is the legal guardian of unaccompanied transferee children. Whilst guardianship arrangements for unaccompanied minors are ultimately a matter for the Government of Nauru, the Nauruan Department of Justice and Border Control, the Department, OPC service providers and expert advisors have worked together to implement appropriate accommodation and broader service arrangements for unaccompanied minors.

Best interests

In relation to ‘best interests of the child’ considerations under the Convention on the Right of the Child (CRC), the Government considers that offshore processing arrangements are designed to discourage asylum seekers risking their lives on dangerous boat journeys to Australia, which is in the best interests of all children. Article 3 of the CRC states that the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration, not ~~the~~ primary consideration. In these circumstances, the CRC does not have absolute priority over other considerations and countervailing considerations, such as the integrity of Australia’s migration system and the national interest.

There are specific arrangements in place for minors prior to their transfer to the Nauru OPC taking place. For example, the Department conducts a Pre-Transfer Assessment, which includes an additional assessment for minors.

Regional Guidelines for Responding to the Rights and Needs of Unaccompanied and Separated Children (UASC)

In June 2012, under the previous Government, the Department provided funding to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to conduct a research project to map, review and assess the protection situation and treatment of unaccompanied and separated children (UASC) who have moved irregularly to and within South East Asia, with a particular focus on Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand. The ‘Regional Guidelines for Responding to the Rights and Needs of UASC’ was an outcome of the project. While the Department provided funding for the project, the Government and Department do not necessarily endorse its content.